Breast Cancer Screening

All women are at risk for breast cancer, including women living with a disability. However, women with disabilities are more likely to be overweight, have had chest x-rays in the past, and to not have given birth—all things that increase the risk of getting breast cancer. Also, many women with disabilities often get screened later or less often than they should.

The best way for you to find breast cancer is by getting a mammogram. A screening mammogram (an X-ray of the breast) is for women who have no signs of breast cancer. It usually involves two X-rays of each breast. The aim of a screening mammogram is to detect a tumor that cannot be felt. If your mother, sister, or daughter had breast cancer, talk with your doctor about your risk. If you're 40 years or older, talk with your doctor about scheduling a mammogram. Please get screened.

Mammography Site Directory

This mammography site directory provides information about the mammography sites in Durham, Franklin, Johnston, Orange, and Wake Counties in North Carolina.

Information was gathered to give women with disabilities basic information about some accessibility features for each agency. This way, women with disabilities can choose the site that best meets their needs when getting a mammogram.

The information was gathered from telephone interviews with sites in 2010 and 2011. Please call to make sure the information is correct.

Other Directory Information

Referral: You don't typically need your doctor to make a referral for a screening mammogram. But all the mammography sites require you to send the results to a doctor.

Relay NC: Relay services allow people who are deaf, hard of hearing, or those with communication disabilities to communicate via the telephone, using either a TTY machine or the internet. For anyone needing to contact a mammography site, dial 711 to speak with the Relay operator to make your mammography appointment.

Transportation

Bus: Stops are recorded in the mammography site listings in this directory.

Paratransit: All paratransit services listed in the five counties require an application. It takes about three weeks before you find out if you qualify for paratransit services.
